About the Special Programme:

Green buildings are structures that are designed, constructed, and operated to minimize environmental impact throughout its lifecycle of building over 50 years.

This includes:

- Efficient use of energy, water, and low embodied carbon materials
- Reduction of waste generation during construction and air pollution
- Improved indoor environmental quality
- Sustainable site selection and development with minimum disturbance to surrounding

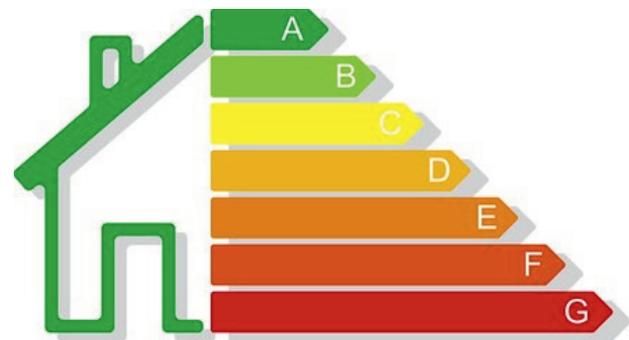

The programme 'Green Building - Leading to Sustainability' is an initiative designed to promote environmentally responsible and resource-efficient design and construction practices. It focuses on reducing the environmental impact of buildings while enhancing economic performance and improving the well-being of occupants. As buildings account for a significant share of global energy consumption and carbon emissions, green building programs are essential in achieving long-term sustainability goals for the built environment

Objectives of the Special Programme

The Green Building Leading to Sustainability Programme aims to:

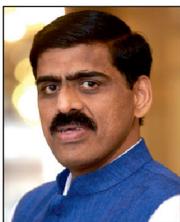

- Promote sustainable design encourage architects and engineers to adopt environmentally friendly designs.
- Improve energy efficiency to reduce energy consumption through renewable energy integration and efficient systems selection
- Conserve natural resources, encourage water recycling, rainwater harvesting, and sustainable material sourcing.
- Reduce carbon foot print to lower greenhouse gas emissions from building construction and operations.
- Enhance occupants' health and well-being by improving indoor air quality, natural lighting, acoustics and thermal comfort.
